

Remote medical officer position in southern Mali

Critical Care International is a small UK-based company established in 2016 by a team with extensive international experience and pre-hospital, critical care, military and acute secondary care expertise. The concept and guiding philosophy of the company is to deliver high quality remote healthcare for companies working in developing world environments and to utilise the financial support of the commercial clients with the quality of the deployed doctors to deliver ethical, evidence based community development projects in the areas of operation.

We have been operating in Mali since 2016 where we provide healthcare to approximately 1000 workers employed at a British-owned gold mine. We are responsible for primary care, emergency response and occupational health services.

A large part of our time is also spent organising and delivering community development projects designed to improve the healthcare services in the local villages. These have included projects to tackle local childhood malnutrition and specialist teaching programs centred on newborn life support and postpartum haemorrhage.

We are currently in a period of expansion and are hoping to have additional such sites in the coming months in Francophone west Africa, potentially in Mali, Senegal or Ivory Coast. CCI are looking for motivated and dynamic doctors fluent in English (fluent in French as well preferable) who wish to work with us over the coming year.

Rotations are six weeks on:off, with competitive salary and all expenses paid.
